

Newsletter

January 2022

This first newsletter of the new year is fully focused on applicants to our open call for proposals. The call deadline of 23 February is nearing but there is still plenty of time to finetune applications. With newly published information and tools, and our personal guidance, the journey towards the finishing line will become much easier. Tap into the support we offer, we are here to help!

Read Our Updated Programme Document

The founding document of our programme has been updated following feedback from the European Commission. The document is now close to a final version, which will be published after the adoption of our programme in spring. Some changes in the document might affect your application, so we recommend reading briefly through the change log file that we created for you.

Our Electronic Submission System Is Live

Today, we have launched our brand new electronic submission system \(Jems\).

To introduce you to this crucial tool, we prepared a number of support measures. These include a user manual with hands-on screenshots, video tutorials, and a dedicated technical helpdesk. We will also host a Q&A webinar to answer your questions live (see below).

Join our Third Q&A Webinar With a Focus on Jems

On Friday, 4 February, we will host a live Q&A webinar about the new submission system. Like the previous webinars, this one will take place on our applicant community. You can already register and send in your questions about Jems in advance. But please check first our other support measures, we might already provide an answer to your questions there.

Use Our New Support Tools to Improve Your Application

We have published two new support tools for applicants to our first call for proposals. The summary generator will help you write a convincing summary of your project proposal. And, if you are still looking for solutions to build your project on, the list of results from Horizon2020 projects could be a good starting point for your search.

Ask for Advice in an Individual Consultation until 11 February

For a few more days we will be offering a non-compulsory individual consultation for each project idea. If you want to discuss the relevance of your proposal and get tips regarding the intervention logic, contents, communications or finances, do not hesitate and request an online meeting with our experts in the joint secretariat.
